

From: Ralph C. Whaley
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/4/02 7:44am
Subject: US vs. Microsoft

The right to property is an inalienable right. Microsoft Corporation including it's owners, the shareholders, have the absolute right to the property created in the context of the company. The right to property includes the absolute right to determine the conditions of sale and use of that property. Property rights include setting any price for any product at any time to any prospective buyer with any conditions of use of the product the seller sets. The prospective buyer is free to accept or reject the terms of sale and suffers no violations of his own rights when confronted with the seller's conditions.

The anti-trust laws impose rules of use and sale of property under threat of government force. The government's responsibility is the protection of rights not their violation. These laws are violations of property rights and should be repealed.

Ralph C. Whaley MD
460 S. 5th St.
Barron, WI 54812-1509
Phone: 715-537-3614